

valkry [Gupta]: Are there any improvements or changes with the official release? [root]: There's a big one! [Gupta]: Yeah. [root]: When you update Excel, you see right away that the text and formulas have changed. When you update QuickBooks, it will only affect what you were doing. [Gupta]: That's amazing. I never thought of that. [root]: If you were in the middle of a project, then you know what I'm talking about. [Gupta]: Yeah. I know. It's quite a mental thing. I just thought of that now. [Gupta]: So when does it start updating? [root]: As soon as you open Excel and do a Save and Exit. If you save it as a *.xlsx file, then you will see the changes right away, but if you save it as a *.xlsm file, then the changes won't show until you open the file again, and only after you do so will you see the changes. [Gupta]: Ah. [root]: And you can do the same thing with QuickBooks: Save the file as a *.qbp, and then only when you open the file will you see the changes.

[Gupta]: Oh, so there is no intermediate step of saving as an intermediate file first? [root]: Oh, sure.

You can do it. But really, unless you are doing a large project, why bother? Simply save as a *.xlsm or *.qbp file, then save again as a *.xlsx or *.xls file.

[Gupta]: Ah. [root]: And if you are doing a project, if you are interested in seeing the results as you go along, then saving as a *.xlsm or *.qbp file would be easier. [Gupta]: So are you saying to do the whole project in one step?

[root]: No. [Gupta]: Are you saying that in step-by-step mode it's ok to save a *.xlsm file as a *.xlsx file? [root]: No, the point is to simply save the file as a *.xlsm or *.qbp file, and then save again as a

*.xlsx or *.xls file
